Important Information for Students

Personal Time Management

While enrolled in the school, there will be limited free time to address personal matters. It is strongly recommended that you proactively manage any personal issues before attending. On the first day of training, you will receive a comprehensive schedule and a briefing outlining the expectations, rules, and guidelines for the duration of your course.

Special Liberty Requests

Before submitting any requests for special liberty, consult with your Chief Instructor. The Director may adjust the academic schedule as necessary to meet educational requirements and accommodate federal holiday liberty periods not indicated on the official academic calendar.

Director's Guidance

As you prepare to attend the College of Enlisted Military Education, understand that you are not just students—you are the Institutional Leaders of the Enlisted Force, with the responsibility of shaping the Marine Corps future. Your influence reaches far beyond your own billet. You set the tone, establish the standards, and lead by example every single day.

Your time at this Academy is not a checkbox—it is an opportunity to sharpen your tools, challenge your perspectives, and elevate your leadership. You are expected to lead with intellect, integrity, initiative, and intensity. That means being engaged, demonstrating humility, and embracing the responsibility to not only improve yourself but to return to your unit as a force multiplier.

Leadership is not confined to tactics and orders—it encompasses discipline, professionalism, communication, mentorship, and accountability. These qualities must be displayed in full during your time here. You are expected to maintain the highest standards in grooming, uniform appearance, bearing, and customs and courtesies, at all times. These are non-negotiable pillars of our identity as Marines.

The Marine Corps looks to its Staff Noncommissioned Officers to be the unwavering standard. That expectation does not change while you're here—it intensifies. Take this opportunity seriously. Learn from your peers, invest in your development, and recommit yourself to the values and traditions that make us who we are.

Lead with purpose. Lead with presence. Lead with pride.
