

Call for Submissions

MARINE CORPS UNIVERSITY PRESS

Marine Corps History journal is seeking submissions of essays exploring the historiography of the Marine Corps, examining the extant sources and the shape of scholarly debate on specific events or actions or on broader general history topics.

Historiographies may focus on Corps involvement in specific wars, battles, operations, or humanitarian efforts (to coincide with upcoming commemorations, such as anniversaries of battles), individual Marines, weapons systems, doctrine, education and training, or cultural history. Essays may evaluate the historiography of a topic; examine shortfalls in the historiographical record; analyze changes in the historiography's treatment or interpretations of a subject over time; or take a unique approach proposed by the author.

MCH's goal is to publish historiographical essays that provide insights for both scholars and PME students about the sources currently available on a range of Marine Corps historical topics and to reveal gaps or shortcomings that offer opportunities for new or further study.

MCH's editors are particularly interested in the historiography of the following upcoming Marine Corps anniversaries:
