Now after some ~~reflections~~ ^{reflections}, it is not difficult to see that these Tactical and Strategic statements are very definitely ~~destructive~~ ^{destructive} in nature. Mulling over this thought and playing it against the destruction ~~attrition~~ - ~~maneuver~~ - Moral ideas contained in the Categories of Conflict one is left with the impression that these ideas aren't much different than the Tactical and Strategic interactive ideas we have just ~~discussed~~ discussed. Furthermore - after some playing with ^{all} these ideas together with some boiling-down and rearrangement - this suggests another, hence an alternative, way for moving these interactions - =

Suspicion

- The ~~Existence~~ of Moral Conflict, as presented, seems to be one-sided and emphasizes the negative or dark side of one's moral make-up.

? - Raises Question - ?

- How do we bring-out the positive side? In other words -- if courage, confidence, and spirit represent the positive counterweights to fear, anxiety, and alienation -- what are the positive counterweights to menace, uncertainty and mistrust

Sought

- In addressing the question we find that the counterweights to menace and uncertainty are not at all obvious unless we start with mistrust and work in reverse order. Proceeding in this way we note that:

II

Insight

- The presence of mistrust implies that there is a rupture or loosening of the human bonds or connections that permit individual to work, as an organic whole, in harmony with one another. This suggests that harmony itself represents an appropriate counterweight to mistrust.
- In dealing with uncertainty, adaptability seems to be the right counterweight. Otherwise how can one adjust to the unforeseen or unpredictable nature of uncertainty.
- Finally, with respect to menace one cannot be passive. Instead initiative is needed otherwise menace may adversely obliterate the benefits associated with harmony and ~~initiative~~. Intuitively, this suggests that initiative is the right counterweight here.
- Using these ideas together with the previous ideas already uncovered, we can modify and enrich the Essence of Moral Conflict as follows!

Essence of Moral Conflict

Negative Factors

- Merse

- uncertainty

- Mistrust

Counterweights

- Initiative

Internal drive that enables one to take action without pressure or prodding by others

- adaptability

Power to adjust or change in order to cope with new or unforeseen circumstances

- Harmony

Interaction of apparently disconnected events or entities in a ~~future~~ connected way

Plan

- Pump-up friction ~~and~~ negative factors to breed fear, anxiety, and alienation in order to generate many non-cooperative centers of gravity thereby sever moral bonds that permit adversary to exist as an organic whole

Simultaneously

- Build-up and play counterweights against negative factors to diminish internal friction, as well as surface ~~friction~~ courage, confidence, and esprit, ~~thereby~~ thereby make possible the human interactions needed to create moral bonds that permit us, as an organic whole, to shape and adapt to change

1. A review of moral-mental-physical conflict--as embodied in the elements that make-up the Patterns of Conflict thus far-- suggests (that there should be) some unifying ideal that can be used to attract the uncommitted as well as pump-up friendly resolve and drive and drain-away or subvert adversary resolve and drive. In other words, what is needed is an ideal rooted in human nature so noble, so attractive that it not only magnifies the spirit and strength of its adherents ^{and attracts the uncommitted} but ^{also} undermines the dedication and determination of any competitors or adversaries. Moreover, such a unifying notion should be so compelling that it acts as a catalyst or beacon around which to evolve those qualities that permit a collective entity or organic whole to improve its position in the scheme of things.
2. Part another way, we are suggesting ^{need for a} a supra-orientation ^{"a center of gravity"} that permits leaders and other authorities to engage ^{these} members and followers to enthusiastically take action toward ~~the~~ confronting Congress all obstacles that stand in the way. Such a theme can be portrayed as follows:
